Chinatown: Wat Mangkon, Kamalawat. I THINK your walk-map is wrong but the alleys are so confusing I'm not absolutely certain. I believe you come up Soi 16 to Charoen Krung and then you DON'T go straight over as per your map. You turn left and take the next right. Your instructions take you next to the Wat but there's no access from that lane (we were then directed round the block to it).

Access to the Assumption cathedral is no longer through the college car park: it's been blocked (Lots more security now in Bangkok). Take the next lane to the North from Charoen Krung (maybe Soi 40?).

I do not believe Kuaytiaw Reua Tha Siam is still around. Just went to search out this restaurant for dinner tonight. The entire area between Soi 3 and Soi 4 at Siam Square is under construction. Really disappointed about not being able to check out one of recommendations

Last Friday I encountered 6 other people looking for the Tamarind restaurant in Sukhumvit area of Bangkok. The restaurant is in your "eating" section of Bangkok but it does not exist anymore. I found a taxi driver who said it had gone away.

Bangkok: Tawan Daeng German Brewhouse: It is stated that the web site is www.tawandaeng1999.com but that is incorrect or out of date the site is <http://www.tawandang.co.th/>

The Whisky Set ".....and a fun night can be had on domestic spirits such as 100 Pipers" I am here for two months to be with family and enjoy a glass of Scotch. 100 Pipers is an excellent product produced by Seagram Distillers PLC and is "DISTILLED BLENDED AND BOTTLED IN SCOTLAND" I am affiliated in no way to Seagram's.
