Jan 10, ALONA LISITSA,
 At the Dusit Throne Hall and Palace the last entrance at 3 p.m. even though they are open til 4. The museum and Anata throne hall are open at 10, the palace includes English-guided tour every half an hour starting with 9.45, 100 baht, there are no all-inclusive tickets only if you go to the Grand Palace and Emerald Budda first and the folk dancing is not there for a couple of years already. The entrance is 250 baht and includes medals museum - you cannot buy separate tickets. At Wat Pho massage school you have to wait long even if you want just foot massage about half an hour at least.

Mar 09, JOHN COLE,
 Chinatown: Wat Mangkon, Kamalawat. I THINK your walk-map is wrong but the alleys are so confusing I'm not absolutely certain. I believe you come up Soi 16 to Charoen Krung and then you DON'T go straight over as per your map. You turn left and take the next right. Your instructions take you next to the Wat but there's no access from that lane (we were then directed round the block to it).

Mar 09, JOHN COLE,
 Access to the Assumption cathedral is no longer through the college car park: it's been blocked (Lots more security now in Bangkok). Take the next lane to the North from Charoen Krung (maybe Soi 40?).

Jul 09, MAGGIE OLSON,
 I do not believe Kuaytiaw Reua Tha Siam is still around. Just went to search out this restaurant for dinner tonight. The entire area between Soi 3 and Soi 4 at Siam Square is under construction. Really disappointed about not being able to check out one of recommendations

Mar 09, JOHN HAMBLETON,
 Last Friday I encountered 6 other people looking for the Tamarind restaurant in Sukhumvit area of Bangkok. The restaurant is in your "eating" section of Bangkok but it does not exist anymore. I found a taxi driver who said it had gone away.
